Sep. 11?, 1969  Penn Central closes a $10 million Deutsche mark loan at 98 from Berliner Bank, AG, secured through Joseph H. Rosenbaum; as the Germans are not familiar with railroad equipment trusts, they demand a direct loan guaranteed by Penn Central; however, as such a loan would require time-consuming ICC approval, the loan is made to the American Contract Company; the loan is to be repaid in eight installments between Mar. 15, 1970 and Sep. 15, 1973 at 8% interest. (Patman, Salsbury - Patman has 9/12 for both actions)

Sep. 11, 1969

Joseph H. and Francis N. Rosenbaum meet with Bevan and others in Bevan's office and sign contract as per Joseph Rosenbaum's suggestion, for the American Contract Company to deposit the $10 million loan from the Berliner Bank with First Financial Trust of Liechtenstein, by whom it is to be invested until such time as it is needed to pay for equipment repairs; the idea was to keep the money in Deutsche marks, which are appreciating against the dollar, as long as possible, since the loan had to be repaid to the Berliner Bank in Deutsche marks; the First Financial Trust is to have 25% of the difference between the income produced from investing the money and the 8% interest owed to the Berliner Bank; in fact there is as of yet no First Financial Trust, and it is to be a “Liechtenstein trust,” not a true trust company or bank. (Patman Rept, SEC Rept, Salsbury - Patman has 9/12?)

Sep. 11, 1969

According to Salsbury’s account based on the legal investigations of Edwin P. Rome, counsel to the Penn Central Trustees, Joseph H. Rosenbaum had suggested to William R. Gerstnecker that the money from the Berliner Bank loan be deposited temporarily in an institution controlled by Goetz, who would have the use of it until Penn Central needed it; Bevan claimed that he had positive assessments of Joseph Rosenbaum from John M. Seabrook and Howard Butcher III, both PC directors who knew him, and from the Washington law firm of Covington & Burling and Charles J. Hodge and also that several New York banks considered Goetz a good credit risk; Bevan seems to have avoided mentioning any knowledge of the Chromcraft scandal, which had been in the papers by now; Patman charges that Bevan colluded with the Rosenbaums and Goetz because they had damaging information about the Executive Jet Aviation affair. (Salsbury)
